National Security Agency, National Cryptologic Museum Library	Fort Meade, MD 20755  (301) 688-2145  nsapao@nsa.gov	http://www.nsa.gov/museum/museu00040.cfm The Library maintains a collection of unclassified and declassified books and documents relating to every aspect of cryptology. The books and records complement the museum exhibits and artifacts, but also offer unique and in-depth sources of information for researchers. The Library has a very large collection of commercial codebooks. These codebooks were used by all manner of businesses to reduce the costs of cable communications as well as to provide a measure of security for trade secrets. Modern communications and encryption methods have made these books obsolete and are mainly of historical interest. Some of the most sought after items in the library include the declassified documents. The Library holds all of the released VENONA documents. NSA's Special Research Histories (SRH) provide documentation of NSA's predecessor organizations in the US Army and Navy's cryptographic services. The SRH collection (available in its entirety at the National Archives in Record Group 457) consists of declassified reports dating predominantly to World War II. The Library also holds some of the oral histories taken by NSA's Center for Cryptologic History.

		These oral histories provide a detailed and personal view from a few of the people who have been a part of world events, including a radio intercept operator prior to World War I and Navajo Code Talkers. A few select, unclassified monographs are also available to the public from the Museum Library. They cover a wide range of cryptographic subjects from early American ciphers to the Vietnam War. Most of the monographs were written and published by NSA's Center for Cryptologic History. These monographs go into greater depth than the museum exhibits or museum pamphlets and help to provide a greater understanding of the events in which cryptology played a role in world history. The Library is open to the public, however the hours vary. Please call ahead to ensure that a staff member will be present to assist you.
